Atlantis

Critical Studies in Gender, Culture & Social Justice Études critiques sur le genre, la culture, et la justice

Feminist Things Rooted in Grief Le féminisme au coeur du chagrin

Kacie G. Hopkins

Volume 45, Number 2, 2024

Take Back the Future: 2023 Women's, Gender, Social Justice Association (formerly Women's and Gender Studies et Recherches Feministes) Conference

URI: https://id.erudit.org/iderudit/1114722ar DOI: https://doi.org/10.7202/1114722ar

See table of contents

Publisher(s)

Mount Saint Vincent University

ISSN

1715-0698 (digital)

Explore this journal

Cite this document

Hopkins, K. (2024). Feminist Things Rooted in Grief. Atlantis, 45(2), 193–196. https://doi.org/10.7202/1114722ar

© Kacie G. Hopkins, 2024

This document is protected by copyright law. Use of the services of Érudit (including reproduction) is subject to its terms and conditions, which can be viewed online.

https://apropos.erudit.org/en/users/policy-on-use/

Érudit is a non-profit inter-university consortium of the Université de Montréal, Université Laval, and the Université du Québec à Montréal. Its mission is to promote and disseminate research.

https://www.erudit.org/en/

Atlantis: Critical Studies in Gender, Culture & Social Justice Issue 45.2 (2024) Special Issue: Take Back the Future: 2023 WGSJ Conference Literary Work

Feminist Things Rooted in Grief

by Kacie G. Hopkins

Photo Courtesy of Kacie G. Hopkins, 2024

I sat my grandmother's graduation picture by the cardboard end of a lace spool.

504.

The number written on the cardboard. What does 504 mean? I will never know, but I can imagine and create a story. Behind the 504 cardboard sits my grandmother's basketball uniform, only the shirt. The colours are purple and white for the Panthers. I thought I had given away all my purple and white years ago when I left that small town and said I was never going back. But behold the vintage basketball uniform sits amongst my lace and scraps of fabric in my office in the city. The number on the uniform is 12. Why number 12? I will never know. My grandmother has passed on and no one really knows this story. Was this jersey even hers? I was told it was. But no one will really know. But I can imagine and create a story. I can see young grandma running with confidence down the basketball court in the same gym where I had summer camp. I knew as a child I shared this place with her. I imagined and created a story.

Dropping down over the basketball uniform, 504 cardboard, and grandma's picture lay satin ties from my wedding gown. This long cream coloured satin tie strapped me into my flowy lace gown on that sunny summer day at the river. Grandma was only there in spirit.

My feminist things (Ahmed 2017) are not intentionally chosen by me. Ahmed states that the feminist survival toolkit "contains my personal stuff, what I have accumulated overtime; things I know I need to do and have around me to keep going on" (236). Through this conversation she created the feminist killjoy survival kit, which features feminist things. Her killjoy survival kit is organized around the phrase, "feminism needs feminists to survive" (236). She states that the killjoy survival kit can be seen as a neoliberal agenda when seen as a self-care kit. Ahmed uses hooks' scholarship as an inspiration for "Item 2" of the feminist killjoy survival kit. She states, bell hooks describes how she surrounded herself with precious objects, feminist objects, so that they are the first things she sees when she wakes up. Think of that: a feminist horizon around you, the warmth of memories, feminism as memory making. Feminism too leaves things behind. (Ahmed 2017, 241; hooks 1988)

The things that sit on my shelf have fallen there accidentally. They are the "feminist horizon" that is around me right now. They are a story that I can imagine and fictionally write. They help me understand that class is centered amongst my feminist things and connect to hooks' passion that feminism is for everybody (2014). My feminist things are filled with questions and memories that reach worlds beyond myself and my grandmother. My things are filled with grief from a thousand stories that no one will really ever know. But we can imagine and create a story. My feminist things hold worlds of women together and were touched by the hands of women from around the world, the remote hills, city factories, gymnasiums. Where did the satin come from? No one knows. Who sewed the uniform? No one knows. Whose hands wrote the 504? No one will know. What really happened to grandma? No one will ever know. Who won the Panther's basketball game in 1945? No one knows.

Finding the answer costs money. Money, that we don't have. Money that we will never have. We will never know. Our things tell stories. Our things tell the stories we want to remember. Our things tell our story. Our things connect us to the world. Our things allow us to write stories with curiosity. Our memories help us in our search for belonging amongst our feminist things (hooks 2008).

Things, Capitalism, Grief, Capitalism, Control, Grief, Capitalism: Controlled by the Cycle

The stone costs money

We dig for pennies in your home

They go toward the stone

The words cost money

We set goals and save for the next year

Your name costs money

Your name given to you by your mother costs money

Who gets the money

We will never know

The stone costs money

I visit

The stone with no name

There are bulbs in the ground

The season is not ready for

Yellow

Pink

Purple

But

You

Bring the colors

Your name not forgotten

My heart is red, my eyes green and brown

Your colors shine on me

Anger

The stone

I want to throw it down

You were more than a stone

The sickness

I wanted to save you from it

You were more than the sickness

The medicine

I want to flush it down

Did you have to take the medicines?

The windows

They were never yours to look out of

I want to break them with the stone

A home

A doctor

A healthy meal

A visit from us

It all costs money

Isolation

Death

Years ago, I wept

Alone by the washing machine

Washing the gloves, vintage gloves, that I told you about during our last conversation

Black or white I asked over the phone?

I could hear your voice tremble as you said Black.

Years ago, four granddaughters

Enjoyed pizza in your home

Amongst the mountains

In your living room

Years ago, four granddaughters moved you and your stuff from the mountains to the hills

We said our goodbyes

And on the rainy night years ago

Two granddaughters drove you through the mountains to the hills

To your next home

A house with women your age

But years ago, you cried

And the granddaughters cried

As they left you in this strange home on the rainy night

Years ago

We wept.

Today we remember you with random things.

Works Cited

Ahmed, S. 2017. Living a feminist life. Durham, NC: Duke University Press.

hooks, b. 2014. Feminism is for everybody: Passionate politics. New York: Routledge.

hooks, b. 1988. Talking Back: Thinking Feminism, Thinking Black. Boston: South End Press.

Kacie G. Hopkins (she/her) is a PhD Candidate with expertise in community economies, feminist social enterprises, and geographies of rural women's handmade crafts and creativity. She studies in the Communication and Cultural Studies program at York University and Toronto Metropolitan Universities. She is also a storyteller, creative writer, artist/ textile designer, and social entrepreneur. She is a member of global research networks such as: The Community Economies Research Network, Rural Women's Studies Association, Women, Gender and Social Justice, and Canadian Association for Studies in Co-operation. Outside of her PhD studies she is active in the social enterprise, Wildflower Enterprises at WildflowerConnection.com, that she and her twin sister founded to connect rural women through crafting, design, and empowerment services. She is an advocate for ethical trading of fashion and continues to write on ethical fair trade practices, specifically decolonizing the fair trade field through ethical and decolonial storytelling and marketing and advocating against toxic charity structures. Further she is a survivor advocate and worked with the YWCA, National Sexual Violence Resource Centre, and Pennsylvania Coalitions Against Rape and Domestic Violence. She is passionate about lifting survivor voices and working on survivor centered and trauma informed pedagogies and approaches to social change.