

Piera Carroli, ed. Mezcla. World Noir in Italy. Marilù Oliva. The Female Poetic in Millennium Crime Fiction

Meghri Doumanian

Volume 43, Number 3, 2022

URI: <https://id.erudit.org/iderudit/1105472ar>

DOI: <https://doi.org/10.33137/q.i.v43i3.41358>

See table of contents

Publisher(s)

Iter Press

ISSN

0226-8043 (print)

2293-7382 (digital)

Explore this journal

Cite this review

Doumanian, M. (2022). Review of [Piera Carroli, ed. Mezcla. World Noir in Italy. Marilù Oliva. The Female Poetic in Millennium Crime Fiction]. Quaderni d'Italianistica, 43(3), 146–148. <https://doi.org/10.33137/q.i.v43i3.41358>

© Meghri Doumanian, 2023

This document is protected by copyright law. Use of the services of Érudit (including reproduction) is subject to its terms and conditions, which can be viewed online.

<https://apropos.erudit.org/en/users/policy-on-use/>

Piera Carroli, ed. Mezcla. World Noir in Italy. Marilù Oliva. The Female Poetic in Millennium Crime Fiction. Leicester: Troubadour Publishing, 2019. Pp. xvi + 249. ISBN 9781838591311.

This interesting volume of collected essays edited by Piera Carroli and published under the meaningful title Mezcla introduces the works of Marilù Oliva, author of numerous noir fiction books. The body of Marilù Oliva's works, in specific her trilogy of La Guerrera, represent endless socio-political and cultural issues that Italy is facing. With this volume, Piera Carroli brings to light the academic analysis of the Italian noir fiction, the transcultural and gender issues, and the style of writing that Marilù Oliva employs in her works, which allow her to carve a unique and new place for noir fiction in the academic literary canon. Mezcla holds contributions from numerous academics from different backgrounds, and it opens with an informative preface by Romano de Marco (ix), followed with an introduction by Piera Carroli (1). The volume is then divided into two clear parts, titled respectively "Part One: Writing the World into Italian Noir," (15), and "Part Two: Guerrera and Beyond" (121). The book concludes with a conversation between Piera Carroli and Marilù Oliva (206) that is found after the references, bibliography (190), and notes (203).

Mezcla stays true to Marilù Oliva's polyglot noir fiction by putting together a collection of multilingual chapters. A starting example would be the "Prefazione" written by Romano de Marco that reads both in its original Italian and in the English translation that follows. In his short essay, Romano de Marco familiarizes the readers with Bologna's multiculturalism and in specific its Latin American community that serves as the source of Marilù Oliva's inspiration for the creation of her main character, La Guerrera. Romano de Marco notes the linguistic reality of the Latin American immigrants living in Bologna, mostly known by the "itañol," the mix of Spanish and Italian, that they speak (xiv). In the preface, the reader is also familiarized with Oliva's unique style of writing that results from using the linguistic reality in Bologna serving both as a metaphor and symbolism, along with the various other problems written in the Italian literary landscape, such as politics, the economy, and the constructed traditional gender roles (xv). The introduction, written by Piera Carroli, is key in understanding the academic purpose of Mezcla. Piera Carroli is clear and concise, and she opens by explaining the focus of the noir fiction, and its origins. She then proceeds in offering an academic definition of the genre (5), followed by Marilù Oliva's bibliography (7), and the many reasons why the author should be placed in the Italian literary canon, from which are her polyglot novels and her “multifaceted transcultural narrative world” (9). She then continues by explaining further Marilù Oliva’s style of writing and explains the origins of the word Mezcla (9–13).

The first part of the book contains five contributions and focuses on the numerous cultural traits that the South American culture brings to Bologna through the character of La Guerrera. The first two contributions are from Piera Carroli, titled respectively, “In the Selva Oscura. Exegesis of the Trilogy” (17), and “La Guerrera as Cross-Cultural Flâneuse. A Journey into World Cultural Memory” (33). In her first contribution, Carroli analyzes the origins of capoeira through Oliva’s main character, followed by the introduction of the origins and importance of salsa both culturally and academically in her second contribution. As Carroli explains, “[s]alsa is often ridiculed as a non-academic subject in some circles, [...] [f]ortuitously, they are also the subject of multidisciplinary studies conducted into the anthropological and social nature of syncretism in Italy, and among young people in Emilia-Romagna [...]” (48). The third contribution is by Laura Lori, titled “Daily Struggles. A Journey into Material Disintegration” (62), which focuses on the violence against women that is exercised in Marilù Oliva’s trilogy. The next chapter is Maricetta Barbaro’s “Fuego. Sulla via del fuoco. Bologna magica e mitologia del fuoco,” that appears both in Italian (77) and in English (89). This chapter focuses on La Guerrera’s discovery of a mythical Bologna that is intertwined with the esoteric traditions of Cuba. This part concludes with a contribution by Piera Carroli titled “From Inferno to Paradise? Towards Reconciliation” (104), which serves as a transition essay to part two of the book, analyzing La Guerrera’s reality and connection with other cultures and languages.

Part two explores a conjunction of memory, cultures, and the everyday fight that women put up in Bologna with its opening chapter by Camilla Ghedini titled “Marilù Oliva: Il noir che racconta l’emancipazione femminile. La Guerrera aka Marilù Oliva evoluzione diegetica e esistenziale,” that reads both in Italian (123) and in English (129). The second chapter, also bilingual (135 and 148) is a contribution by Daniele Maria Pegorari, titled “Il noir di Marilù Oliva: dal poliziesco seriale all’apologo morale,” which explores how Oliva masks the giallo with noir, and brings forth socio-political and cultural issues that Italy is facing. The last two chapters are by Piera Carroli, titled respectively “Lo zoo—Surfing the Web for Good and Evil. Exploitation and Rebellion” (162), and “A New Noir Ethics. Spose sepolte. Closing Observations” (180). The former chapter analyzes the sociological problems that result with warfare, such as human trafficking and violence, by analyzing the characters of Lo Zoo, and highlighting how they persist. The latter provides a concluding analysis of the trilogy, reminding the readers of the cross-cultural sensitivity, and giving a psychological analysis of childhood traumas and cultural shocks.

Mezcla is a first of a kind volume that brings to the readers an analysis of the Latin American immigrants in Bologna, along with the various cultural differences and problems they face through Marilù Oliva's trilogy. Moreover, this volume also places Marilù Oliva in the Italian literary canon, transforming her noire fiction into works that can be analyzed from an academic point of view. Marilù Oliva also rightfully earns her place in the Italian literary landscape with her rich references to literary giants, and her wholesome presentation of the Latin American communities in Italy throughout her brilliant narration.

MEGHRI DOUMANIAN
McGill University