How He Served

every dawn, he brought his woman some portion of his journey. before sunrise, setting match to kindling in a pot-bellied Hudson Bay Co. stove, slipping down to the sandy shore in the summer, chopping away overnight ice in the water-hole in winter, fetching liquid for her morning Red Rose tea and then, surrendering the sun of his fingers, he warmed her with touches, tracing his need along the smooth brown skin lines and curves of her body.

through the dawns of their lives how he served was his journey; illustrated many seasons over with the flames of devotion tenderly,

he brought his woman.
