Cover illustration: This early 20th-century colourized postcard published for the tourist industry shows a Maliseet village at Nerepis Bridge on the St. John River. Dispossession did not extinguish Maliseet ties to the region. The image demonstrates that families maintained connections to the southern portion of their traditional homeland. Built off of reserve lands, the tents and small houses, which may have been seasonally occupied, provided the Maliseets with direct access the lower river valley. Source: Old postcard purchased by the author.
