Why I Left My Book Club

I left my book club because I could no longer hide behind the wide clear layers of privilege.
I no longer wanted to see the feigned ignorance of arched eyebrows or hear nervous giggles when topics brushed past vanilla courtyards.
These women do not really want to know what I think.
Instead, they tell me to have a glass of wine and relax,
as if that would make me Dorothy:
three clicks of my ruby shoes and suddenly I am on the dirt road to oblivion.
No, I would rather be Red Riding Hood who has found her way in the dense forest and has slain the big bad wolves—turned those beasts into a new overcoat of her own choosing.

Dorsía Smith Silva is a Professor of English at the University of Puerto Rico, Río Piedras. Her poetry has been published in several journals and magazines in the United States and the Caribbean, including Portland Review, Saw Palm, Aji Magazine, Gravel, Adanna, Mom Egg Review, and Poui: Cave Hill Journal of Creative Writing. She is also the editor of Latina/Chicana Mothering and the co-editor of four books.
